Satellite dishes generally come in one design: ugly. However, not only is this compact (47 x 26 x 7cm) antenna smaller and less obtrusive than traditional parabolic dishes currently on the market, it has a secret weapon to prevent sensitive neighbours developing "dish rage". For an extra £25 you can buy unique camouflage to help the device blend seamlessly into your home's exterior wall. From a digital photo of your home's exterior wall, the maker will create a bespoke sunlight-resistant photo sticker to render your Sqish much less noticeable from a distance. The Sqish works both with Sky receivers and the new Freesat set-top boxes (from £50-£150), which offer subscription-free digital television channels (including some HD programmes) in areas where Freeview reception is poor.
